While Microsoft commends these public officials for involving citizens in a decision that will affect them so profoundly, your voice is more important now than ever before to ensure that the DoJ hears the full spectrum of opinion on this matter.

Gee, when Micro$not got an email containing what Eric Cordian described as "the best defense of Microsoft's anti-trust position that I've seen," they had me charged with a felony and had their employees perjure themselves and hide evidence in order to have me convicted and imprisoned. I would suggest that anyone sending any emails to Mico$not consider the fact that it may result in their PerseProsExecution by a CorporRapeTion and a GovernMint with bottomless pockets. Besides, Micro$not's high-priced lawyers already proved their inability to do anything more than piss away BadBillyG's money while waiting for HisDigiHoliness' new found Respect for throwing large amounts of money into the Corrupt Lobby System to take effect. All anyone will do by providing Micro$not with public support is open themselves up to Micro$not's legal wrath and unconstitutional persecution while lowering the cost of Micro$not's political bribes. People wshould be particularly careful in light of the impending legislation doubling the sentences for computer crimes committed by people using the Linux Operating System. (Hey! You don't think I'd just make that up, do you?)
